2021 GOLF OUTING BENEFICIARY SCHOLARSHIP FUND

The Challenge: When Assistive Technology = Empowerment

For people with disabilities, access to technology can be a lifeline toward independence, self-directed care and key social determinants of health, such as socialization, employment, and, especially since COVID-19, access to critical health care services. Access, however, often requires adaptability -- both in the technologies used, as well as the ways in which one uses them.

Unfortunately, access to highly skilled technology therapists and appropriate assistive technology (AT) solutions is neither widely available nor financially accessible to the disability population. Without supportive and consistent access to technology, people with disabilities experience faster rates of cognitive and functional decline, isolation, and an increased risk of institutionalization.

The Opportunity: Inglis on the Cutting Edge

Amid this scarcity of qualified AT therapists and trainers, Inglis Assistive Tech Solutions (IATS) has emerged as a leadership example of how these services can be provided to those living in the community. IATS consists of a team of highly skilled technology therapists trained in a wide range of technologies who are also experts in the assessment, training and support of people with physical disabilities.

Individualized curricula focus on the participants' needs and goals, teaching them how to utilize:

- Email and social media
- Smart home solutions
- Online banking and shopping
- Newly acquired technology
- Education resources and online classes
- Online employment resources and applications
- Common programs and applications (such as Word, Excel, etc.)

To date, this program has been fueled primarily by charitable dollars. IATS, which for the first nine years of its existence provided all of its services free of charge, has recently undergone a reassessment of its business model, establishing a sliding scale payment model meant to provide long-term financial stability while still serving the needs of a very diverse disability population.

In order to ensure that the disability community continues to have access to IATS services, regardless of the ability to pay, Inglis has established the AT Scholarship Fund to provide these services free of charge to those in need.

MEET DOMINIK

Sixteen-year-old Dominik, who lives with his family in Croatia, travels with his mother to the US a few times a year for medical care. He met Inglis' AT Team for the first time in 2019, and together they collaborated to identify Dominik's goals and determine the best approach.

One of Dominik's favorite hobbies, like most his age, is playing Xbox. Not only is it fun, but it's also an incredibly important way for him to stay virtually connected with his peers. He also likes using mobile tech, like his tablet, to surf the web and keep in touch with family. Out of the box technology, however, wasn't working for him. At least, it wasn't until he connected with our Assistive Technology Team at the Inglis Innovation Center.

The AT Team worked with Dominik to leverage built-in accessibility features on his iPad and Xbox as well as implementing some new tools to make using each easier.

Dominik now has greater independence to relax and – quite simply – just be a teenager.
